LONDON RIDDLED WITH PUZZLING ENIGMAS!

PROFESSOR LAYTON STILL IN SEARCH OF WONDER BRAINS

One week in and the puzzling panic is still widespread across once jolly London. The iron-witted Professor Hershel Layton is still on the lookout for potential puzzlers to change the fate of their fair city. Problem is most citizens still seem more keen to pose puzzles rather than solve them. On asking one kind citizen to lend their brain to the cause, they responded, "See, the other day I asked this mate on the street for exact change for a dollar. He said he had blinkin' more than a dollar's worth but couldn't make exact change! Is that even possible? What's the most change you can have without having change for a dollar?" Odd.[1]

When the professor approached another normal-enough-looking citizen, they wondered, "Professor, I just got a letter concerning a dinner party I'm throwing tomorrow for family friends. It said that "one grandpa, one grandma, two fathers, two mothers, four children, three grandchildren, one brother, two sisters, two sons, two daughters, one father-in-law, one mother-in-law and one daughter-in-law" are coming. How many people should I expect for dinner tomorrow?[2]

Puzzling times indeed. Here's hoping the prof can find more wonder brains!

BLOCK BUSTED

The rental chain has been battered by online and mail-order services.

HISTORY
Blockbuster was founded in 1985 when video cassette recorders were becoming a fixture in U.S. homes.

NOTABLE
Under its plan, Blockbuster would cut its debt to about $100 million from nearly $1 billion.

QUOTABLE
"I think he'll reduce the debt and reduce the number of stores and make it profitable again and sell it to a capital group or take it public. He'll make a ton of money off of it."

Retail consultant Mark Freiman, speculating on what billionaire Carl Icahn might do with Blockbuster

NEW YORK Blockbuster filed for bankruptcy protection Thursday, battered by online and mail-order services such as Netflix that have transformed how customers rent movies.

A group of bondholders led by billionaire Carl Icahn and hedge funds have signed off on a restructuring deal that gives them a controlling stake in the company, court documents show.

Blockbuster plans to reinvent itself as a leaner competitor with more digital video offerings, including those on mobile devices. It said business is continuing as usual with its roughly 3,000 U.S. stores still open.

The bankruptcy allows the company to break leases and analysts expect Blockbuster to close hundreds of stores.

"The company is in a race against time," said David Pauker, a managing director at turnaround firm Goldin Associates. He said Blockbuster needs to find a new format to stop its business from shrinking. REUTERS

What about other pay video services?

Reuters

NEW YORK Time Warner could offer premium video-on-demand as early as the first quarter for $20 to $30 per movie in a trial, the company's CFO said Thursday.

Time Warner is considering making movies available for rent on pay TV services shortly after their theatrical release and ahead of their DVD release, Chief Financial Officer John Martin said at a Goldman Sachs investor conference in New York.

Several Hollywood studios are examining similar plans, but have remained on the sidelines for fear of hurting box office sales.

Reuters reported last month that Hollywood studios are getting closer to a deal to make new movies available to distributors, including Time Warner Cable and DirecTV Group, as soon as 30 to 60 days after theatrical debuts for a premium price.

Martin also played down fears that Netflix's rising power could lead viewers to cancel subscriptions to cable networks such as Time Warner's HBO and pay TV subscriptions.

Netflix's popularity has soared since it began offering an online service that lets viewers stream movies and TV shows over the Internet and watched on television sets.

"I do think it's a little bit overblown," Martin said.

"To the extent Netflix becomes a direct competitor, we are paying very close attention to how the competitive landscape is going to evolve."

Netflix shares hit an all-time high Thursday following the bankruptcy filing of Blockbuster.

"The Blockbuster bankruptcy continues to fuel the momentum behind the Netflix story," said Tony Wible, analyst with Janney Montgomery Scott.

Mess with 2Pac's legacy? That's just wackaveli

There are some things in hip-hop music you just shouldn't touch.

Some are physical, like Run-DMC's iconic Adidas or turntables touched by DJ Premier.

Others are intangible: Ice Cube's scowl or Busta Rhymes' manic energy.

I figured this was common knowledge, but apparently we need to add 2Pac's alter ego, "Makaveli," to the list of intangible items.

Pac adopted that moniker for "The Don Killuminati: The 7 Day Theory," his final and arguably greatest studio album. The name, derived from Niccolo Machiavelli, author of "The Prince," epitomizes the way Pac shrewdly straddled the line between thug and philosopher poet.

That isn't exactly a lyrical legacy being carried on by Waka Flocka Flame.

Miles from a thug philosopher and light years from a poet, Waka is the current king of ringtone rap. His lyrics often are unintelligible. There should be closed captioning for his most recent radio hit, "Hard in the Paint."

That's why it's galling that this feather-light lyricist titled his upcoming debut album "Flockaveli."

I don't blame an upstart such as Waka for wanting a piece of Pac, but there are many respectful ways to pay homage, such as incorporating an image of the late, great MC in concert video montages or donating to the Tupac Amaru Shakur Center for the Arts in Georgia.

Waka chose a not-so-respectful tribute by borrowing from the slain rapper's name without a shred of the lyrical skill set to back up that comparison.

On Waka's best day, he wouldn't qualify to hold 2Pac's bandanna backstage.

I'm sure I've ticked off a wave of Waka fans. Frankly, I don't care. While I won't deny Waka's commercial success, even his supporters should face facts that he is manure on the microphone.

Not everyone can be Mos Def or Jay Electronica, but Waka isn't even average. Not to put too fine a point on this, but Waka's flawed flow makes Gucci Mane sound like KRS-One by comparison.

Waka invoking 2Pac in any reference to himself, let alone his official album cover, is the equivalent of stepping on Run's Adidas or spilling a can of pop on Premier's equipment.

It's that bad.

The only upside is that Waka's brazen move could finally close the books on 2Pac's much-rumored resurrection.

If Pac secretly is alive, there would be no better time to re-emerge than Oct. 5, the day Waka's album is slated to drop.

My hope is Pac would crash one of Waka's concerts and publicly wrest the Flockaveli name from his greasy grasp.

If Waka wants a new name, he should just add a "c" to his current one.

At least Wacka Flocka Flame—as my Facebook friends attest—is a more realistic representation of his abilities.

The Axe effect

Obama adviser will return to Chicago from White House

Chicago Tribune

David Axelrod, a top adviser to President Obama and the main architect of his election victory in 2008, will leave the White House next year and return to Chicago to work on the president's re-election campaign, a White House aide said Thursday.

Axelrod has not specified a departure date, but he plans to remain in his current position "well into 2011," the aide said.

Axelrod, who calls himself a "Chicagoan on assignment," has long made clear he missed his hometown and would return before the end of the four-year term. His wife still lives in the city.

One of Obama's most trusted aides, Axelrod occupies a small office just steps from the Oval Office.

On a wall in Axelrod's office hangs a picture of the White House drawn by his daughter. The Chicago skyline is shown in the reflecting pool.

His portfolio is a broad one. He shapes the president's message, oversees the speechwriting team, plots political strategy and advises on policy.

A longtime campaign strategist, he is aware of his limitations when it comes to complex policy matters.

He once made a self-deprecating reference to himself as "a duffer" when it comes to policy.

Other White House aides said part of Axelrod's role is reminding the staff of the president's campaign commitments and making sure that the White House agenda stays true to Obama's promises.

White House Chief of Staff Rahm Emanuel, a pragmatist when it comes to policy matters, once described the difference between himself and Axelrod as "prose" versus "poetry."

Obama's political viability, though, is one of Axelrod's preoccupations. Steven Rattner, the former "car czar" and author of a new book about the auto industry bailout, described Axelrod as sitting in meetings discussing poll results showing the public's disdain for bailouts.

Mustachioed, rumpled and paunchy, Axelrod is a popular figure in the White House. He plays basketball and after a game he occasionally shows up, sweaty and winded, at a local bar frequented by reporters. Axelrod is a former political reporter for the Tribune.

While some White House aides tend to become part of the Washington culture, Axelrod is a holdout. He rented an apartment rather than buy a house, so as not to put down roots.

On a snowy morning in Washington last year, he appeared on a TV talk show and was asked about the weather.

"We call this a dusting in Chicago ... I just want you to know," he said.

Prof deletes controversial post from blog

Chicago Tribune

A law professor at the University of Chicago, where President Obama once taught, is sorry he ever complained about the president's tax policies.

Todd Henderson last week wrote on a blog about the effect the expiring Bush tax cuts would have on his family. He said his family, whose household income is north of $250,000, could not afford higher taxes. His wife is a doctor at the University of Chicago Hospitals.

"A quick look at our family budget, which I will happily share with the White House, will show him that like many Americans, we are just getting by despite seeming to be rich. We aren't," Henderson wrote on the blog "Truth on the Market."

He then went on to disclose some personal details about his family's finances. He paid $100,000 in federal and state taxes last year and $15,000 in property taxes. He has a big mortgage, more than $250,000 in student loans, two cars, a nanny and a lawn service.

He concluded by inviting the president to his house, which is two blocks from the Obamas' home in Kenwood, and to "judge for himself whether the Hendersons are as rich as he thinks."

His complaints caused quite a stir in the blogosphere, as commenters attacked Henderson as whiny rich guy who doesn't know how he good he has it in today's economy. His blog post went viral.

Henderson on Monday deleted his original post. In apologizing for removing the post, he wrote, "The electronic lynch mob that has attacked and harassed me—you should see the e-mails sent to me personally!—has made my family feel threatened and insecure." He revealed that his wife did not approve of his post and disagrees "vehemently" with his opinion.

‘Blues Brothers’ mall exits stage left

Chicago Tribune

For more than 30 years, Dixie Square Mall in Harvey has sat vacant and decaying—a symbol of despair and loss of jobs and retail in the south suburbs.

It’s probably best known as the site of the infamous mall car chase scene in the 1980 film “The Blues Brothers.”

But in two months, officials will begin demolishing the building and preparing it for a new life, Gov. Pat Quinn said. On Thursday, Quinn announced a $4 million federal grant for what officials claim will be the first step toward revitalizing that area.

“Dixie Square has been a place that we know has to change fundamentally,” said Quinn, surrounded by south suburban elected officials and employees of Harvey’s city cleaning program. “I look forward to the day real soon when we will have this site cleaned and available for development.

“This is a huge investment in cleaning up Dixie Square. For years and years it has been an eyesore,” he said.

After the building is demolished, local leaders hope the site will be redeveloped into another shopping area. In years past, there have been many failed proposals to transform the property—from a mausoleum to a shopping center to a sports stadium. And though officials said Thursday that the demolition was the first step toward something bigger, there are no concrete, funded plans to redevelop the site.

The mall is in the center of Harvey at 151st Street and Dixie Highway. It’s close to major transportation hubs, and the demolition and subsequent development would bring much needed jobs to the region.

Study: Half of Chicago gay men who have HIV don’t know it

Chicago Tribune

More than half of the sexually active gay and bisexual men in Chicago who have HIV don’t realize they are infected, creating a substantial risk of spreading the virus, according to a study released Thursday by the U.S. Centers for Disease Control and Prevention.

In Chicago, 18 percent of men who have sex with men are infected with HIV, on par with the national average of 19 percent, the study conducted in 21 large U.S. cities found. But in Chicago, 53 percent of those men are unaware that they are infected, higher than the national rate of 44 percent.

According to the CDC, the men may be unaware of their status for several reasons, including never having been tested, having been infected recently, underestimating their personal risk or believing that advances in HIV treatment minimize the threat of HIV.

The new findings, published ahead of Monday’s National Gay Men’s HIV/AIDS Awareness Day, found all races and ethnicities of gay and bisexual men were severely affected, but black gay and bisexual men were particularly affected, with 28 percent infected and 60 percent unaware of it. Eighteen percent of Hispanic gay and bisexual men are infected, with 46 percent unaware, and 16 percent of white men have HIV, with 26 percent unaware, according to the study.

Fountain fun leads to 3 arrests

Chicago Tribune

Buckingham Fountain, Chicago’s ornate landmark, is a classic draw for tourists and residents alike.

On Wednesday, with the final hours of summer ticking away, three friends climbed over the rail around the fountain, checked the depth and the layout of the pipes, and walked through the cold, waist-deep water. They slid over the algae-covered basin through the spray and eventually climbed onto the tiered fountain.

“It was a pretty day. The sun was setting right behind the skyline,” said Sana Rezai, 25. “And we wanted to go in. ... The wind was blowing. We were getting sprayed at different points. It felt great.”

But about three miles away at police headquarters, an officer spotted the illegal swim on one of the city’s security cameras. Just as Rezai, Millicent Kennedy, 20, and Giovanna Pizzoferrato, 19, were about to climb out, two officers approached. Then about 10 more showed up, they said.

All three were handcuffed, led away and charged with misdemeanor reckless conduct. A day later, they expressed little regret, describing the view up close as spectacular.

Dipping into the fountain happens every now and again, Central District Cmdr. Christopher Kennedy said. It had become such an attraction at Lollapalooza that security details were added this summer, he said.

Rezai said he was surprised they were arrested. They would have been shagged out of the fountain and sent on their way in his native L.A., he said. But regrets? “I have to say no,” he said. “It was completely worth the cold six hours in jail.”

Ayers denied special status

In a very unusual move, University of Illinois trustees on Thursday denied giving emeritus status to controversial retired professor William Ayers. The vote, at a U of I board meeting in Urbana, was unanimous.

4 wounded in shootings

Four people were wounded in two separate shootings on the Far South Side on Thursday. Police were searching for a white cargo van with tinted rear windows in connection with one of the shootings, according to police radio dispatches.

First mayoral ads hit TV

Miguel del Valle was the first elected official to declare his candidacy for Chicago mayor and now he’s the first one on TV with ads. The city clerk’s small cable buy started running Thursday.

1 killed, 2 injured in crash

One person was killed and two others injured in a fiery traffic crash Thursday at a busy Northwest Side intersection near the Caldwell Woods Forest Preserve. Police were investigating.

City inspector convicted

A federal jury convicted a city building inspector Thursday on charges he demanded thousands of dollars in bribes to overlook code violations. Jose Hernandez was convicted on two counts of soliciting or accepting bribes.

Chilean miners out sooner?

1 Speculation is growing that a rescue of 33 Chilean miners could come much sooner than the government's early November forecast, as three drills work around the clock to free the men who have been holed up since Aug. 5.

Pastor denies sex allegation

2 In a statement read on a syndicated radio show Thursday, Atlanta-based megachurch pastor Eddie Long denied he had coerced young male church members into sex, as alleged in three lawsuits filed against him.

Commonwealth Games still on shaky ground

3 India's prime minister called a meeting with two ministers for Thursday evening as the country scrambles to pull together the problem-plagued Commonwealth Games. India's ability to host the games, which begin a week from Sunday, has been put in doubt after a bridge collapse.

Gates won't share plans

4 Secretary of Defense Robert Gates, who has signaled his desire to retire next year, refused to say whether he plans to stay through July 2011, the month when the president has said he would like to start reducing the U.S. troop level in Afghanistan.

Close call for planes

5 A US Airways jetliner last week came within 100 feet of colliding with a small cargo plane near the Minneapolis-St. Paul Airport, according to the National Transportation Safety Board, which announced Thursday it is investigating the incident.

Starbucks charging for difficult drinks

After declaring its resolve last month to absorb increases in the cost of green coffee, Starbucks said it will boost prices of larger size and hard-to-make drinks, while maintaining or lowering the price of some of its most popular beverages.

Is Zuckerberg saving face?

6 NEWARK, N.J. Mark Zuckerberg, founder and chief executive of social networking powerhouse Facebook, is planning on donating $100 million toward improving public schools in the troubled district of Newark, N.J.

According to an official familiar with the agreement, Zuckerberg's donation will be the first installment from a foundation financed by Zuckerberg and focused on bettering education.

With an estimated net worth of $6.9 billion, Zuckerberg ranked 35th on this year's Forbes 400 list of richest Americans—up from 158th last year.

At 26, he and Facebook co-founder Dustin Moskovitz are the youngest billionaires on the list.

FACEBOOK PROBLEMS
Facebook again went down for a time Thursday—marking the second day the social network website has had technical difficulties.

Zuckerberg is expected to officially announce the donation on "The Oprah Winfrey Show" on Friday, along with Newark Mayor Cory Booker and New Jersey Gov. Chris Christie.

The announcement comes a week ahead of the release of "The Social Network"—a highly anticipated movie about Facebook's early years. The movie, and the book it is based on—"The Accidental Billionaires" by Ben Mezrich—do not depict Zuckerberg in the most favorable of lights. Some critics say the donation is being timed to counteract the effects of the movie.

Control of Newark public schools has been in the hands of the state since 1995. Under an agreement between Booker and Christie, the state will maintain legal control over the district, but will authorize the mayor to develop a comprehensive education plan. No details have been released at this time about how the money is to be distributed or used.

Zuckerberg grew up in Westchester County, N.Y., and founded Facebook in 2004, while studying computer science at Harvard University.

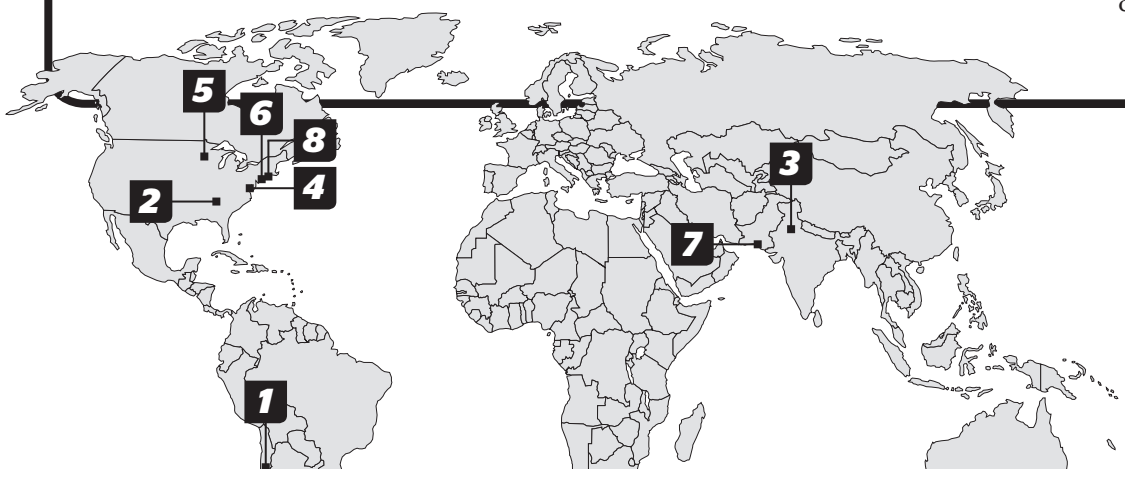
President makes plea for peace

8 NEW YORK In a wide-ranging address to the U.N. General Assembly on Thursday, President Obama dwelled on the intractable Middle East conflict and urged Israelis and Palestinians to seize the day in talks his administration initiated.

"Now is the time for the parties to help each other overcome this obstacle. Now is the time to build the trust—and provide the time—for substantial progress to be made. Now is the time for this opportunity to be seized, so that it doesn't slip away," Obama said.

World leaders, including Palestinian leader Mahmoud Abbas, heard Obama's position for peace. However, the Israeli U.N. delegation was not present because it was Sukkot, a Jewish holiday.



Flatscreen surplus is consumers' gain

A historically large oversupply of LCD TV panels is causing TV prices to fall right in time for the holiday shopping season. By the end of this month, LCD TV prices will be about 5 percent lower than last year, according research firm DisplaySearch.

No Bears? No problem

Just because the big game is Monday doesn't mean Sunday lacks storylines

Are the Bears for real? Is their 2-0 start a tease? Did they beat good teams or get lucky?

Those are some of the questions fans have been asking themselves after the Bears' unexpected 2-0 start to the season. We'll know how good the Bears really are when they face the undefeated Green Bay Packers on Monday night.

But before the rivals kick off at Soldier Field on Monday, Bears fans can learn a little more about their team—and the team's immediate future—by paying close attention to some of Sunday's action.

Here's what to watch. REDEYE

Minnesota vs. Detroit

Noon Fox

The Bears season got off to a dubious start against Detroit. The offense couldn't hold on to the ball, and the defense broke down on the Lions' last drive when Calvin Johnson caught what looked like a game-winning pass. The Lions, however, didn't get the W, and they didn't get one last week against Philadelphia, either, but they've played well. If Detroit can stay with the Vikings or pull off an upset, the Bears' win against Detroit looks that much better.

REUTERS

Houston vs. Dallas

Win No. 2 for the Bears came on the road vs. the Cowboys, a game that surprised almost everyone. Jay Cutler carved up the Dallas defense, and Matt Schaub might too. Dallas is 0-2, and the thinking is that the Cowboys are not as good as advertised. If Dallas falls again, which is what the oddsmakers expect, it'll tell us more about the Cowboys than the Bears. But if Tony Romo and Co. can pull off an upset, perhaps the Bears' win isn't that suspect after all. And if the prolific Schaub struggles, Cutler and the Bears receivers should be shown a little more respect.

Jacksonville vs. Philadelphia

Green Bay opened its season—a season that many predict will end with a Super Bowl appearance—with a tough win at Philadelphia, staving off a Michael Vick-led rally. A road win is always impressive, but the Pack looked average. Vick then led the Eagles to a win over Detroit. So, another Philly win Sunday, and the Packers' opening road win is even bigger.

REUTERS

New England vs. Buffalo

Last week, the Packers throttled Buffalo. New England likely will too. Buffalo is terrible defensively, but the Packers managed only 91 yards rushing against the Bills with starting running back Ryan Grant out. That could be a key, as the Bears are tops in the NFL in stopping the run. Packers QB Aaron Rodgers isn't worried about his team's running ability. "We always have felt like when someone goes down with an injury, the next person has to step up and make the plays," he said. "We're very confident in Brandon Jackson and John Kuhn."

1 No Bears on Sunday, so you'll ...	... be starting my NFL knitting circle, Fly Patterns.	... still not make time to watch the Cubs or Sox.	... turn to "Madden '11" until Monday night.	... pull my car into the alley and start a tailgate.	... go sit in the woods.
2 What NFL quarterback is next to get demoted/injured/replaced?	The Chiefs' Matt Cassel, or as I like to call him, "White Cassel."	Carson Palmer. Anything to avoid T.O.'s BS.	Michael Vick: A jaguar's bite is deadlier than a pit bull's.	Brett Favre, due to him not being able to use a cane on the field.	If we're lucky, it'll be Aaron Rodgers.
3 What's different about a Blackhawks-Detroit matchup in the preseason?	When you get slammed into the boards, it only hurts during the regular season.	Fans test out battle cries, like "De-troit stumbles!" and "Motown is immaterial!"	Nothing. "Hatin' " the Red Wings is a 24/7 occupation proclamation.	Nothing. Beer still costs the same.	Seeing the Red Wings choke isn't as satisfying. Oh, yes it is, who am I kidding?
4 Back-to-back Hawks-Red Wings games is like ...	... Ted Gruber teaming up with MacGruber.	... chasing a bloody mary with an even bigger bloody mary.	... back-to-back meetings between Ozzie Guillen and Kenny Williams.	... watching Randy Couture and Chuck Liddell fight for 120 minutes.	... back to back Bulls-Pistons games. Detroit hate is universal.
5 Who is Ime Udoka?	Fanatical dictator by day, world acclaimed bongo player by night.	The best figure skater/pastry chef/botany expert you've never heard of.	The creator of sudoku? "Ima Dorka" because I have no clue.	A Dell support representative.	Another defensive stalwart the Bulls have invited to camp. Tougher than a wolverine.

FIRE EXTINGUISHED?

Team needs to rally or could miss out on MLS playoffs for first time since 2004

The numbers are starting to look daunting for the Fire.

They have seven games to play, 10 points to make up and three teams to leapfrog if they hope to secure the MLS' eighth and final playoff spot.

And if they don't? They will be the first Fire team to miss the postseason since 2004, the only other year they didn't reach the playoffs.

Fire players insist their team isn't finished yet.

"I think we have to pretty much scratch everything that has happened up to this point," midfielder Mike Banner said after one practice this week. "We still have a chance. There are seven games left [but] we have to start a new season."

Since July 3, the Fire have gone 2-6-3. They're mired in a seven-game winless streak and have scored only two goals in their past five games.

Saturday's home match against Seattle (10-9-6, 36 points) is a good place to start. The Sounders are one of the teams the Fire are chasing. They also will meet another contender Wednesday when they travel to San Jose.

Fire vs. Seattle
7 p.m. Saturday, Toyota Park

"We put ourselves in a big hole, and we're going to have to fight our way out," Fire forward Calen Carr said. "At this point, the answer is going to come in just hard work and really just scrapping to get everything we can."

Eight teams qualify for the postseason. The top two teams in each conference automatically qualify. The next four teams with the best records—regardless of conference—fill out the field.

The Fire (6-9-8, 26 points) actually have two ways to qualify.

They could finish second in the Eastern Conference. But that would mean almost having to run the table to knock out the Red Bulls (12-8-5, 41 points).

Forward Nery Castillo is uncertain for Saturday's game after suffering a hamstring injury last week at Real Salt Lake. If he doesn't play, Fire coach Carlos de los Cobos will go with Collins John as the lone forward.

If Castillo is OK, he will join John in a two-forward attack.

The Sounders won the teams' only other meeting—a 2-1 decision Aug. 28 in Seattle.

« Ichiro Suzuki became the first major leaguer to have 200 hits in 10 consecutive seasons when he singled in the fifth inning of Thursday's game between his Mariners and the Blue Jays in Toronto.

SAN FRANCISCO 13, CUBS 0

» Arizona General Manager Kevin Towers might want Greg Maddux as a bench coach or pitching coach, but Jim Hendry won't let Maddux leave the Cubs a third time. "Greg and I have a really good relationship," Hendry said. "Obviously Greg's intent is to stay with the Cubs in 2011, doing exactly what he's doing now.

» The Golden State Warriors have decided to part company with Don Nelson—who late last season became the winningest coach in league history—and replace him with assistant Keith Smart, espn.com reports.

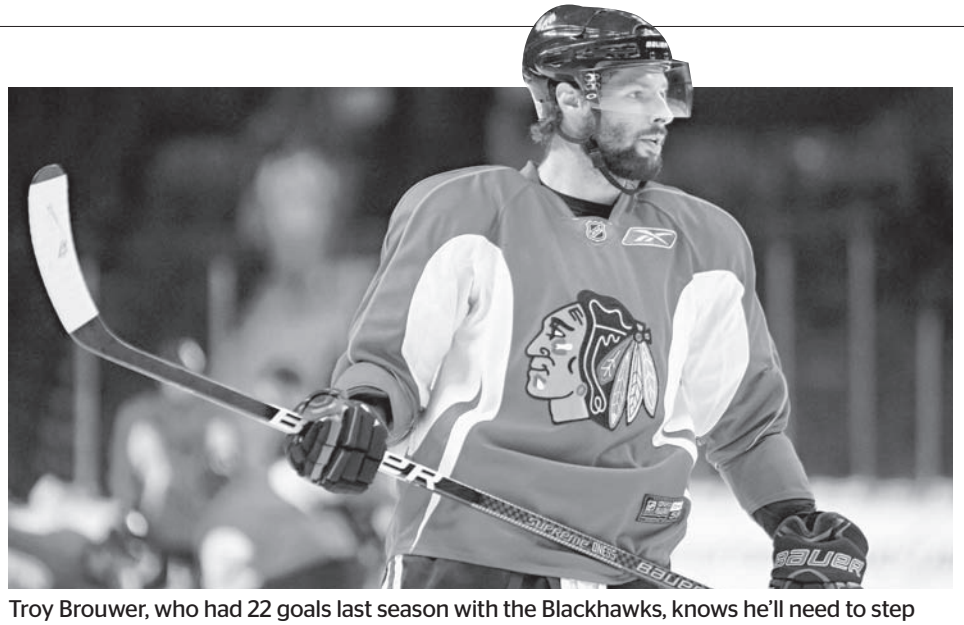
Troy's time

Blackhawks looking for Brouwer to step up



Troy Brouwer, who had 22 goals last season with the Blackhawks, knows he'll need to step into a leadership role as one of the team's more established players. BRIAN CASSELLA/TRIBUNE FILE

Chicago Tribune

The days of flying under the radar are over for Troy Brouwer.

The winger has gone about his business quietly during his two-plus seasons with the Blackhawks, providing steady play—with flashes of explosiveness—to help them develop into the top team in the NHL.

Coming off a Stanley Cup with a plethora of new faces and the question marks that come with them, coach Joel Quenneville and his staff have set Brouwer in their sights as a player who needs to reach the next level to compensate for the offseason maneuvers that could hurt the Hawks' depth.

"With some of the departures we've had there are some holes that need to be filled," Brouwer said at training camp. "They already have expressed they're looking at me to fill some of those holes, whether it's scoring goals or playing tough and standing in front of the net. My whole role kind of expands. I know [Quenneville's] looking to get a lot out of me."

Having increased his goal-scoring from 10 during the 2008-09 season to 22 last season, Brouwer should be ready to take the next step in his development. It's a challenge the 25-year-old welcomes.

"I'm past that entry point in my career where [there isn't much expected]," Brouwer said. "I'm a guy who's going to be looked at to contribute leadership. I'm going to take a lot of responsibility on myself and have a good year."

To do that, and to keep in the good graces of Quenneville, Brouwer needs to maintain a high level of play throughout the 82-game regular-season grind, something the Vancouver, B.C., native has struggled with as a pro.

"Last year he had a great stretch and other years he has had great stretches," Quenneville said. "Putting it all together over the course of 82 is a challenge for him. [Him] being more consistent is what we're looking for."

On this, the coach and player see eye-to-eye as Brouwer said his biggest challenge this season is to limit prolonged periods when he's not at the top of his game.

"That has been my biggest thing in Joel's eyes—my consistency and to make sure I'm playing at my best or close to it every game. As long as you can limit those games, or even limit those shifts, it's going to help in the long run."

With a nearly $1.5 million bonus in his pocket and smart, beautiful Winnie (Carey Mulligan) at his side, Wall Street trader Jacob (Shia LaBeouf) is living the good life. Wait! It's 2008, so Jacob's firm is about to crash, and Winnie's estranged father, former Wall Street hotshot Gordon Gekko (Michael Douglas), is out of prison and secretly talking to Jacob about a family reunion.

The buzz: Oliver Stone's 1987 "Wall Street" won Douglas an Oscar and added "Greed is good" to the pop culture handbook. Now, at a time when the financial world is just a bit different, comes a sequel starring 24-year-old LaBeouf, who is two years older than Charlie Sheen was when the original came out but still looks too young for the role.

The verdict: Stone has completely lost it. Embarrassingly blunt metaphors of bubbles soaring and dominoes falling turn "Money" into amateur hour, which goes on and on for two-plus hours of ponderous financial moves with none of the original's razzle-dazzle strategy. Where "Wall Street" had nasty confidence and saw ethics led astray by dollar signs, the sequel feels pathetically soft and redundant. People should care as much about Gordon Gekko's family life as they should about Hannibal Lecter's favorite vacation spots.

Newsday

It might seem morbidly funny now, but Oliver Stone's "Wall Street" shocked audiences in 1987 with its portrait of the barracuda ethos infesting American high finance. Hence, the prospect of a sequel—"Wall Street: Money Never Sleeps," opening Friday—raised a few obvious questions:

» Could a work of fiction possibly match the reality of the past few years, with credit default swaps, foundering subprime mortgages and a cast of characters who make Captain Kidd look like Laa-Laa the Teletubby?

» Could a returning Michael Douglas possibly make Gordon Gekko—the "Greed is good" guy of the original—seem like anything but a piker? As even Stone has to admit, over the past few years "the bankers became the Gekkos."

What no one could have calculated was the added attention brought to the movie by Douglas' recent illness—stage 4 cancer of the throat—or, given the severity of his illness, the upbeat attitude of the actor, who won a best actor Oscar for the first "Wall Street" and is talking about the whole matter as "just another chapter."

"It didn't cost Fox a lot," Douglas joked about the media attention his cancer has generated. In New York to promote the film, the actor looked a little gaunt and wore a tousle of unmanaged white hair that seemed to be approaching Einsteinian proportions. And he was frank about the future.

"My doctors are optimistic, I'm optimistic, I get radiation every day, chemo. ... Life goes on," he said. What keeps him upbeat is tennis, college football season and "a picture that's rockin'. What's not to like?"

The picture in question opens with the release from prison of Gekko, who has served eight years for the insider trading that got him arrested last time. Shia LaBeouf plays Jake Moore, a young Wall Street hotshot who is living with Gekko's daughter, Winnie (Carey Mulligan), and watches the investment bank owned by his mentor, Louis Zabel (Frank Langella), get shot out from under him by the nefarious rumor-mongering and evil doings of the Gekko-like Bretton James (Josh Brolin). Jake wants revenge and allies himself with the none-too-trustworthy Gordon to get it.

Stone, who used words such as "whimsical" to describe his new film, said he had made a movie about people and their foibles: "love, lust, deceit, betrayal."

"I have to make a story people want to see," he said, not apologetically.

But Stone also is known for his left-leaning politics—he has made nonfiction films about Fidel Castro and Hugo Chavez. One of the more electrifying moments of "Money Never Sleeps" is a justification of the Bush-Obama bank bailouts. The right wing's richest bete noire, George Soros, consulted on the film. ("He's an interesting man," Stone said). Which makes it a little odd that, by making a film for Fox, Stone is sort of working for Rupert Murdoch.

The director rubbed his face. "I have enough enemies, as Voltaire said—on his deathbed, by the way," he said, considering his studio alliance. "But Rupert's a very nice man when you meet him, and I made the first one for Fox, so they had the copyright."

Besides, what Stone prefers to stress about the film isn't its critique of banks, regulatory agencies or human greed ("I'm not delivering a jeremiad"), but its position as an old-fashioned drama.

"It's like an old Darryl Zanuck film," he said, citing as an example the 1947 anti-Semitism drama "Gentleman's Agreement." "There's a socially conscious background, onto which we project human conflict."

'Wall Street' time machine

"Wall Street: Money Never Sleeps" takes its title from a scene in the original 1987 movie. Gordon Gekko (Michael Douglas) walks along the beach at dawn and calls Bud Fox (Charlie Sheen). Gekko tells Fox, "Money never sleeps, pal. I just made $800,000 in Hong Kong gold. It's been wired to you. Play with it."

The cell phone in Gekko's hand takes up nearly the entire screen. Not exactly the smart phones of today. And with that, we look at just how much life has changed from 1987 until now. NEWSDAY

Buried
(R)

Oh, this isn't good: Paul (Ryan Reynolds), a truck driver doing contract work in Iraq, wakes to find himself buried in a coffin. On the plus side, he does have a lighter and a cell phone. The downside: That air supply ain't gonna last forever.

The buzz: That's a good, streamlined concept for a thriller, which is like a few minutes of "Kill Bill" expanded into an entire movie. Director Rodrigo Cortes' challenge will be in maintaining the suspense of this could-you-imagine-that situation, similar to the stranded-in-the-shark-infested-ocean flick "Open Water."

The verdict: The concept's freaky, and Reynolds effectively communicates the suffocating dread of thinking he never may be rescued or see his family again. When a snake gets in the coffin, "Buried" tightens a vice around your lungs. Yet you won't find the claustrophobic urgency of a film like "Lebanon" in "Buried," which makes only obvious statements about the "value" of human life and political damage control during wartime. Uncomfortable laughs from Paul being bounced around from person to person on the phone (if he can actually get someone on the phone) diffuse the tension, which too often revolves around the battery life of a cell phone and the amount of air remaining. That threat is terrifying in our mind but difficult to see on-screen. MATT PAIS IS THE METROMIX MOVIES PRODUCER. MPAIS@TRIBUNE.COM

Legend of the Guardians: The Owls of Ga'Hoole

Captured by wicked birds who want everyone to salute "the pure ones," innocent young owl Soren (Jim Sturgess) escapes before he can be "moonblinked" and brainwashed into slavery. The dull little hero then connects with a ragtag bunch of largely indistinguishable birds to round up the good guys and uncover some kind of weird program involving evil metallic bats. Hugo Weaving, Helen Mirren, Geoffrey Rush and Abbie Cornish also lend their voices.

The verdict: Setting an all-time Hollywood record for number of uses of the word "gizzard," "Owls" would be hilariously stupid if it weren't so terribly boring.

Shia trivia: The answers

1 C. LaBeouf told Letterman that Shia is Hebrew for "Praise God," while his last name is French for "beef," thus making him "Praise God for beef."

2 A. LaBeouf played the aimless, yet hilarious character of Louis Stevens on the popular Disney Channel television show from 1999 to 2003.

3 B. LaBeouf's father was a clown who studied commedia dell 'arte, while his mother was a former ballerina who once studied under Martha Graham. They used to sell hot dogs across the street from their apartment.

4 D. In "New York, I Love You," LaBeouf plays Jacob. The film chronicles the love stories of multiple couples in stories told by multiple directors. In "Disturbia," LaBeouf is Kale Brecht, a troubled teenager who suspects his neighbor is a murderer. In "Charlie's Angels: Full Throttle," LaBeouf plays Max, a young ally of the Angels and their sidekick, Bosley.

5 B. Voight gave LaBeouf a number of books and movies on the art of acting. LaBeouf said before meeting Voight when he was only 14 years old, he knew "nothing about the craft."

A thriller? A documentary? Regardless, it's interesting

fast paised
MATT PAIS
mpais@tribune.com

Catfish (PG-13)

Nev, a charismatic 24-year-old photographer in New York City, develops an online friendship with Abby, an 8-year-old in Michigan who turns Nev's photos into paintings. This connects Nev with Abby's family, particularly her attractive older sister, Megan, in strange ways that are captured by documentarians Henry Joost and Nev's brother, Ariel.

The buzz: A major talker at this year's Sundance Festival, "Catfish" comes with a veil of secrecy and a marketing campaign begging audiences to go in knowing as little as possible.

The verdict: Sigh. Little can be said about "Catfish" without spoiling the mystery, but it's fair to say that healthy skepticism raises questions about the filmmakers intentionally going along with what they recognized as a good story and in turn landing on something exploitative. The way "Catfish" unfolds is part thriller and part human tragedy, a chronicle of social media's role in relationships and what the Internet has done to our level of trust, with trajectories in both directions. To some degree, "Catfish" might be pulling the same trick it's exploring, but in an oddly fascinating way that doesn't make it any less valid as modern button-pushing.

MATT PAIS IS THE METROMIX MOVIES PRODUCER. MPAIS@TRIBUNE.COM

FOX SEARCHLIGHT PICTURES

Never Let Me Go (R)

Boarding school students Kathy, Tommy and Ruth are told to maintain their health and, not unlike the warnings in "The Village," that it's very dangerous to go outside certain boundaries. They discover the terrible reasons for the warnings as children, but as adults (played by Carey Mulligan, Andrew "the next Spider-Man" Garfield and Keira Knightley), they must confront difficult feelings.

The verdict: The unsettling secret emerges from the bag early on, and then the story doesn't expand on it. Why don't the main characters lash out about their devastating circumstances? The effect of watching "Never Let Me Go" is like knowing someone has something to say but coming to the realization that they're not going to say it. Mulligan is terrific as always, but there's hardly anything here that can be considered an examination of love or humanity, sexuality or medical science. It just makes you want to re-watch "The Orphanage."

EASY A

@BillieHoligay: Easy A with the corset and scarlet letter. Sure to be a popular costume amongst LP trixies this Halloween

@KeepMoochin: Easy A surpassed my expectations this weekend with semi-original plot elements and lands a few steps past Mean Girls.

@TforTrendsetta: Easy A was cheeky, satirical and some jokes went over teenagers heads, I think that was the best part!

THE TOWN

@GoatKING: The Town is an intense bank robbery spree with high-powered dialogue with a star-studded cast taking you along for the ride.

@BVAX: The Town—It was wicked awesome!!

OTHERS

@vaughnchicago: in "Devil" the story is predictable, the characters are cookie cutter, and the scares are telegraphed. It's horror by the numbers.

@micaltena: get low: an excellent screenplay that asks: who do you trust with your story? watch one man's struggle to tell his.

@lepolich: The American—fast action, italy was beautiful, good plot, different role for clooney, three out of five stars

@nikasaurus: I saw "I'm Still Here" today at the Century Landmark theater. I walked out of the theater feeling neutral.

Taylor aid

Shared-plates spot from Scott Harris gives Little Italy strip just what it needs

By Lisa Balde

More doesn't always mean better, as proved this summer by the boom of humdrum openings along Taylor Street in Little Italy. So when we heard about a new rustic Italian spot and wine bar from Scott Harris (the Purple Pig in River North; Francesca's on Taylor across the street; Aldino's, closed after a short run a few blocks away), we wondered if this dining-scene vet could anchor Taylor's new spots helmed by first-time restaurateurs. Less than two weeks after opening, Davanti Enoteca's consistently packed tables and thoughtful, affordable menu prove it's off to a good start.

FIRST LOOK

Davanti Enoteca

Hours: 11 a.m.-11 p.m. Monday-Thursday; 11 a.m.-midnight Friday-Saturday; 11 a.m.-10 p.m. Sunday

It's immediately clear that Davanti Enoteca and nearby sibling Francesca's on Taylor ... are night-and-day different. Where Francesca's boasts white linens and suited hostesses, Davanti prefers distressed wood tables and servers clad in jeans and long-sleeved T-shirts. The dining room is bustling but laid-back. In all corners, people are laughing and storytelling with glasses of wine in hand and dressed-down managers are chatting up diners about food and the neighborhood.

All throughout dinner, we were impressed with ... the soundtrack. Kudos to the creator of this dining room playlist spinning Chairlift, the Smiths, Edward Sharpe & the Magnetic Zeros, the Cure and Belle & Sebastian.

Thank you, Purple Pig ... for lending Davanti your love of a la carte meats and

Cheat sheet

Good for: Dates, group outings, after-work drinks
Crowd: Young professionals, college friends, neighborhood girlfriends
Menu key: $7-$13 pasta plates are not quite entrees, $8-$11 pizzas are a meal for one (but taste better paired and shared)
Music: Indie rock, synth pop, New Wave, rock
Wear: Casual or date wear cheeses. We could snack all evening on these mix-and-match offerings of gorgonzola, Grana Padano, dry-cured Italian ham and spicy red-pepper salami ($5 each, three for $12, four for $15).

The definition of "small plates" here ... could be "medium plates" elsewhere. Our server told us two plates per person are appropriate, but a couple of big eaters at our table were stuffed after two pasta plates and a pizza. You can't go wrong with risotto carbonara ($8), toothsome, well-seasoned risotto with pancetta, sweet peas, parmesan and an egg yolk; and tender giant rigatoni with slightly spicy, cured sausage ($8, left). We're still dreaming about the egg-topped pizza della fattoria ($9, above) topped with melt-in-your mouth pork belly, scallions and asiago cheese.

You'll save money here on ... wine. Bottle prices are retail: If you uncork at the restaurant, you'll pay a $7 corkage fee; take it to go and it's the flat price. Pick a bottle from the vino list (which comes to your table attached to a comically large glass bottle), and the server gets it from the wine-lined back walls. Not a wine drinker? There's beer ("by the handle" or "by the neck") and cocktails.

No matter what day you go ... there's a decent special to be had. Mondays, order a beer and a burger (regularly $9, topped with roasted garlic mayo and caramelized onions and served with sweet potato fries) for $9, and on Sundays, corkage fees are waived.

Don't leave without trying ... dessert. The cannoli sundae ($5) is a meal of its own, with layers of sweet fried dough, cream and chocolate sauce.

Our bottom line ... Affordable, sharable plates in a casual setting with friendly, efficient management at the helm. We'll be back.

QUESTION OF THE WEEK

John Legend and The Roots put out a disc of socially conscious music. What artist could lead their own revolution? Why?

Here are some answers we liked from Twitter and Facebook. Follow @mmxmusic and watch for next week's question!

FACEBOOK

Christopher Johnston
I think there are many who already are. Or are trying. Bono is. Lady Gaga is starting to. The Artist/Activist model was created decades ago with the likes of Dylan, Joni Mitchell, even the Beatles (toward the end). Madonna already led a sexual revolution that changed quite a few things, look at all those who now imitate her.

Michael Andrews
The power that pop culture holds over society can enable any musical artist, actor, or "reality star" to lead a revolution. Our core values are lost in what these people say. Some of them are truly activist's while others simply ride coat tails to make themselves more popular. It's disgusting yet it's what keep's us going.

Michelle Williams
Alicia Keys....she always give positive feedback with her music....and give the fans 100%.....

Rosa Sow
Besides these two? Lady Gaga

Sandi Ramirez
Zack De La Rocha of Rage Against the Machine

Rafael Reyes
Um, remember rage against the machine?

Ryan Swinford
Greg Graffin from Bad Religion would be ideal for this. He is a Phd in evolutionary biology and has a secular viewpoint that would make for an ideal revolutionary.

TWITTER

@kathall77
Are you kidding me @MetromixCHI?!?! @tmorello is the revolution. Have yo noheard of The Night Watchman? SSSC? Rage Against the Machine?

@trimjl definitely @mayerhawthorne. check his sound out. no one else like him.

Sad Brad's big break

Chicago Tribune

Since childhood, "Sad" Brad Smith has been drawn to acting—even majoring in theater at DePaul University—so it's little surprise that his big break came via film. What is surprising, however, is that the break occurred when one of the 30-year-old's songs landed in a major Hollywood production: the Jason Reitman-directed, George Clooney-starring "Up in the Air."

"I love music, but I just didn't feel that innate ability like I did with acting," said Smith, whose lo-fi heartbreaker "Help Yourself" soundtracked the movie's emotional climax. "I knew I liked my music, but I didn't think anybody else would. I was listening to that negative voice: 'You don't play music well. You're not a good singer. Your songs are indulgent.' "

Ever self-deprecating, Smith even adopted the name Sad Brad as a goof—a winking reference to his proclivity for writing hard-luck anthems. "I'm not always sad," Smith said, "But I tend not to write when I'm feeling good."

Born and raised in Highland Park, the singer, who makes his home in Lincoln Square, grew up with little interest in music. He spent his time illustrating his own comic books and exploring the sewer system that stretched beneath his family's suburban home. Once he reached Highland Park High School, Smith immersed himself in the theater program. Around this time, Smith's musical interests started to blossom as older classmates turned him on to artists such as the Beatles and Bob Dylan. In short order, he'd formed his first band, Resinous Glaze (its name taken from the ingredient list on a box of Milk Duds), a Primus-influenced collective the singer describes as "psychedelic and ominous."

Although music has become Smith's dominant creative outlet in recent years, he had been hesitant to share songs outside a small circle of friends until Reitman came calling.

"The biggest impact (of the movie) is that it gave me the confidence that my music is something I don't have to be embarrassed about," Smith said. "There are people who like it and connect to it."

The "Up in the Air" exposure also prodded the notorious procrastinator to complete his first album, "Love Is Not What You Need," which he released digitally last year.

"If I hadn't had that reason to just do it, it'd still be unfinished," said Smith, who wrote most of the album's confessional, ramshackle tunes during a tumultuous break-up. "It's easy to keep fussing because there are so many options when you're in the studio. It's maddening."

RECALLED HIP REPLACEMENT SYSTEM Linked To FAILURE

More than two years after the FDA began receiving complaints about the failure of hip replacement implants made by DePuy Orthopaedics, parent company Johnson & Johnson is recalling the DePuy ASR™ XL Acetabular System.

About 93,000 of these DePuy ASR™ hip devices, as well as devices manufactured by Zimmer, have been implanted worldwide, with many of these patients requiring a second hip replacement after the implants have failed.

These devices may cause infections, fractures, dislocation, sensitivity to the metal, loosening of parts and pain.

If you've experienced problems, call James Rolshouse & Associates toll free at 1-888-409-8378.

- Joints Contract & Become Inflexible
- Severely Affected People May Be Unable To Walk Or Close Their Hands
- Skin Feels Hard Or "Woody"

Symptoms usually begin within a few days to several months after being injected with contrast dye. In some cases, NSF can be fatal. If you or a loved one suffered symptoms of NSF following a MRI or MRA scan, call James Rolshouse & Associates at 1-888-409-8378.

✗ Proof cover charge

New Gold Coast club Proof (1045 N. Rush St.) caught our attention with a lengthy craft cocktail list designed by one of our favorite mixologists, Bridget Albert. But the fact that they're charging a dance club-caliber cover ($10-$20) means we'll probably never stop in for an impromptu after-dinner drink. –LISA ARNETT

✓ Chicago International Film Festival

The schedule for the 46th annual bash (Oct. 7-21) is finally here! Aside from highly anticipated movies you've heard of ("Black Swan," "127 Hours"), the event includes several solid flicks you haven't, such as "Waste Land," "Brother and Sister" and "Trust," directed by Chicago native David Schwimmer. Go to metromix.com now for a continually updated gallery of reviews for fest flicks. –MATT PAIS

JEWELRY

Crystal Studded cuff

$88 at J. Crew

A big, bold cuff can change an outfit. Suddenly what was a basic T becomes new and chic. Wear it with anything from casual weekend looks to a cocktail dress. This cuff definitely makes a statement, so don't bother pairing it with other jewelry.

JOANNA GUSTAFSON FOR REDEYE

ALBUM

'Wake Up!'

John Legend & The Roots

John Legend and The Roots bring back the very specific era of '70s soul that was both political and inspirational, realistic and still uplifting. They don't tamper too much with the originals from the legendary Donny Hathaway ("Little Ghetto Boy") and Harold Melvin and The Blue Notes ("Wake Up Everybody") and the should-da-been legendary Baby Huey ("Hard Times"). But they don't really need to. Legend's rich soul vocals and The Roots' equally lush soul arrangements succeed in updating these classics.

VIDEO GAME

'Civilization V' PC

Yup, the turn-based strategy game that already has stolen countless hours from PC gamers returns for a glorious fifth episode. "Civilization V" doesn't revolutionize the series, but it nearly perfects it by adding new tools and multiplayer options and a more streamlined interface. As in previous "Civilization" games, your job is to expand your small city into a vast empire using diplomacy or your military to deal with other nation states. In other words, you can decide if you're more of a Barack Obama or a George W. Bush. If you lack patience for the game's slow-paced, board game-like feel, look elsewhere. Otherwise, this fun and addictive title is a strategy gamer's paradise.

FALL BEAUTY PRODUCT PICKS

Fall is here— or trying to be—but don't despair. These products might give your look a boost. MCT

GOODBYE, SUMMER

» Keep that summer glow with a little help from Jergens' Natural Glow REVITALIZING Daily Moisturizer ($8.99). The lotion has a new formula that should provide 50 percent more antioxidants and Vitamin E, both of which help promote healthy skin. The lotion has two versions, depending on what skin tone users start at (fair or medium), and is meant to provide a gradual and lasting tan.

» It's getting cool enough (finally!) for hairstyles to actually hold their form all day. John Frieda's Root Awakening Strength Restoring Hair Spray ($6.49), a non-aerosol spray, promises to make hair not only stay in style, but also to have a touchable sheen.

COLOR CHANGE

» Arguably the best part of the fall season, save for perhaps the endless turkey and pie, is the changing of the leaves. As the green shades turn to amber and bright oranges, NYC New York Color offers a new collection of makeup: the Berry Bloom collection ($1.99 to $4.99). These berry-inspired and rich floral tones are mean to complement fresh fall colors.

Super sleepers

By Scott Bolohan
FOR REDEYE

They started as simple naps on the bus ride to high school and swim practice. Before long, Jacqueline Trudeau found herself snoozing in coffee shops, outside on the grass, in libraries and in her University of Chicago classes.

"I have apparently fallen asleep in class a few times and still managed to answer questions, despite being asleep," said Trudeau, 21, who wrote about the best campus locations to catch some Z's for the school's admissions blog.

"Words cannot describe how happy a single nap makes me," she wrote.

Are naps really all that? Maybe. A study out of the University of Pennsylvania that was published this summer suggests periods of napping or sleeping in can be used as "recovery sleep" and help undo sleep deprivation, in contrast to the widely held belief that napping isn't beneficial.

Half of Americans nap at least once a week and a quarter of Americans say they don't get enough sleep to be alert the next day.

"I noticed that ... naps tended to boost my performance at swim practice, as well as focus on my homework later in the evening, so even after I graduated from high school I started incorporating naps into my day if I had time," Trudeau said.

Her experience is in line with the findings in the Pennsylvania study, which concluded that napping increased alertness and the ability to concentrate among its participants.

"In most instances, naps can be very helpful to fatigued individuals during the midday," said Dr. Tamarah Duperval, medical director at UIC's Mile Square Health Center. "There have been a number of studies over the years from researchers and sleep associations noting the benefits of naps, as long as the timeframe is reasonable."

Napping now is a luxury for Martin McGovern, 22, a die-hard sleeper who has nodded off on the "El" so frequently that he "can't even count the number of times I have woken up one to three stops past my exit."

But since he took a new job this year, he's had to change his nap schedule.

"I watch 'Mad Men' and see these ad guys sleeping in their offices midafternoon and say, 'Why can't we do that?' But then I think, 'I also don't drink Scotch at 11 a.m., and there are 50 e-mails I need to get through by lunch.' "

Matthew Gaydos, 22, of southwest suburban Burbank, said he never has been a napper.

"No matter how exhausted I might be in the middle of the day, I just fight it off and eventually I'll get my second wind," he said. "I don't think I'm really missing out by not napping. I see the people who nap all the time and I just feel like they're wasting a large chunk of their day."

JOB SERENITY

Most bosses frown on employees sleeping on the job. Not Carol McCarthy.

McCarthy, the president of health care branding company Remedy, installed a "rejuvenation room" in the Loop office in 2008, complete with aromatherapy, sound machines, plants, slippers and a massage chair.

If napping on the job seems like a sure way to get fired, McCarthy said the employees thought so too.

"Initially people were really skeptical to nap on the job," McCarthy said. "Now people use it when they want to use it."

McCarthy herself is no stranger to the rejuvenation room.

"When it's a real stressful day or I have a tight deadline, I'll go in and use it," she said. "When people get out, they say they feel refreshed and rejuvenated and can get back to the task at hand." S.B.

Dieting? Try 3 square meals

Reuters

Sitting down to eat three meals a day may be a better strategy for weight loss than grazing on several smaller "mini-meals," according to a study.

Researchers from Purdue University in West Lafayette, Ind., found overweight and obese men on low-calorie, high-protein diets felt more satisfied and less hungry when they ate three times a day compared with when they ate six times a day.

"There's a lot of lay press about eating frequency," researcher Dr. Heather Leidy, who is now at the University of Missouri-Columbia, told Reuters Health.

While there's a widespread perception that it's better to eat little meals more often, she added: "These mini-meals everyone is talking about don't seem to be as beneficial as far as appetite control."

Studies on whether eating frequency affects appetite control have had "conflicting" results, she and her colleagues note in the journal Obesity. To investigate further, they randomly assigned 27 men who were overweight or obese to eat either a high-protein diet or a normal-protein diet for 12 weeks.

Diets contained 750 fewer calories than each man needed to maintain his current weight.

Starting at Week 7 of the study, the men either ate their assigned diet in three meals spaced five hours apart or in six meals eaten every two hours, for three days in a row. The study participants then switched to the other eating pattern for an additional three consecutive days.

Men eating the higher-protein diet (25 percent of total calories from protein) felt fuller throughout the day, didn't want to eat as much late at night and were less preoccupied with thoughts of food than the men who were consuming 14 percent of their energy as protein.

While eating frequency didn't influence appetite in the men on the normal-protein diet, the researchers did find that men in the high-protein group felt fuller in the evening and late at night after eating just three meals a day.

It's already been established, Leidy said, that high-protein diets are better for appetite control. The diet men followed in her study "is not Atkins by any means," she added. "You're still getting an adequate amount of fiber and fruits and vegetables with these diets."

The Sinise life

Reuters

Gary Sinise made a name for himself in hit movies such as “Forrest Gump” and “Apollo 13,” and in recent years, the Chicago-born actor has found even greater fame on TV as detective Mac Taylor on the CBS crime drama “CSI: New York,” which returns at 8 p.m. Friday. Sinise, whose credits include “The Human Stain” and “The Forgotten,” talked recently about making the show, his charitable group, Operation International Children, and playing music with his Lt. Dan Band, named after his role in “Forrest Gump.”

CBS moved your tine slot and sometimes that has mixed results. How do you feel about the change?

Great. I think CBS has a lot of faith in the show, so moving us from Wednesday to Friday night is fine. They want to make room for some new shows but they know we’re very strong.

What can fans expect this season?

The big news is Sela Ward joining. She’s terrific and she’s slid into the show very easily, and our focus is on introducing her character. And we have some great guest stars appearing, like Edward James Olmos. The writers have some great stories, so I feel it’ll be one of our best seasons ever.

How much of you is there in your character, Mac?

He’s got a lot of integrity and I like to think we share that. [Laughs.] He’s honorable and straightforward, and though he’s different from me in many ways, I love playing him as he’s a great leader and mentor. I also like the military aspect, as I’ve met a lot of great leaders in the services.

Is all the technology, like the virtual MRI, real?

Most of our stuff is either real or based on emerging technology. I don’t think there’s anything on our show where you could say, “Well, that could never happen!” It’s all reality-based.

Ever get grossed out by all the dead bodies?

Yeah! [Laughs.] It is about murder and there’s some pretty gruesome, graphic stuff. I’m always shocked at what we get away with on TV. When did it become so easy to show someone’s brain splitting open or their guts hanging out? It’s horrible!

Tell us about Operation International Children.

I started that back in 2004 in order to provide our troops with school supplies they can give to kids in Iraq. It was set up after I’d visited Iraq a couple of times and visited schools out there, and I’ve been quite involved in that and also visiting hospitals and playing concerts for the troops.

And your band, the Lt. Dan Band, plays the concerts?

Check us out at ltdanband.com. All the money goes to charity and supporting the troops, and I love doing it. But I won’t be giving up my day job. [Laughs.]

Katy Perry is too hot for TV? Not so fast, puppets

Katy Perry and Elmo in the "Hot N Cold" music video for Sesame Street. SESAME WORKSHOP PHOTOS

By Dana Moran | REDEYE

America's parents have spoken. While Katy Perry's bra might not shoot whipped cream in her "Sesame Street" segment that previewed on YouTube, her massive cleavage was too much for the mommies and daddies to bear, and she won't appear on the show, producers announced Thursday. Maybe these parents haven't been paying attention to the bad influence the puppets might have on their children. RedEye can think of a few ways "Sesame Street" characters could be corrupting America's youth.

Big Bird
Apart from having an attachment disorder tied to his teddy bear, we can't find anything wrong here. Big Bird rocks!

Bert and Ernie
We're going to ignore that OTHER rumor about these two in favor of more scandalous fodder. Ever seen a 22-year-old who wears old man sweaters and collects paper clips? That boring sap was a Bert fanatic. Ernie taught us that it's OK to relentlessly annoy your friends, as long as you pretend you didn't mean anything by it.

Oscar the Grouch
If you want your kids to grow up to smell like a landfill or appear on A&E's "Hoarders," Oscar is the perfect mentor. Not to mention they're sure to come away with a sunny disposition. On the positive side, though, it seems like he's a very good owner to his pet worm, Slimey.

Cookie Monster
Three words: Worst. Diet. Ever. "The Biggest Loser" owes a lot to Cookie Monster.

Grover
Grover fancies himself a great teacher, but almost all his lessons are factually flawed, leading to a nation of ill-informed children. His alter-ego, Super Grover, is much cooler, but probably leads these ill-informed children to injure themselves while trying to fly.

Elmo
We're pretty sure The Situation was a huge Elmo fan—both of them love to speak in the third person. Evidence of Elmo being into GTL has yet to be found, though.

Kiss & tell

Yes, the kiss between Mitchell and Cameron will appear in Wednesday's episode of "Modern Family." But the show's stars insist the gay liplock isn't happening because producers felt the heat from fans.

"It's nice that people care so much, but it kind of bums me out in that now it looks like we're doing something because somebody begged us to or pressured us to," Eric Stonestreet, who plays Cameron, told Entertainment Weekly.

Jesse Tyler Ferguson, who plays Mitchell, echoed that thought.

"It's not a 'Choose Your Own Adventure' type of show," he told the mag. "We have amazing writers. And we're not just going to give the fans whatever they want to see."

Wise guys rumor

After runaway acclaim for the Martin Scorsese "Boardwalk Empire" pilot on HBO comes a new rumor: There are rumblings that a TV show based on the director's classic flick "Goodfellas" is being shopped around, according to deadline.com. What, does this amuse you?

'Mad Men' branches out

"Mad Men" is getting some attention for its guest stars—and rumored guest stars. Naturi Naughton (above), who starred in the 2009 remake of "Fame," will appear in Sunday's episode, justjared.com reports. Meanwhile, in a we'll-believe-it-when-we-see-it report, gossip columnist Liz Smith published a rumor that Mel Gibson is in talks to get a story arc on "Mad Men" next season. Hmmm.

Potter sneak peek

A new movie trailer for Part 1 of "Harry Potter and the Deathly Hallows" appeared online Thursday, aptly described on ew.com as "a roughly two-minute barrage of you'd-better-not-blink shots." The movie opens Nov. 19.

Tasty fashion

Lady Gaga's not wasting the meat from her MTV Video Music Awards dress. The dress's designer, Franc Fernandez, told eonline.com the dress will be turned into some sort of jerky. Chew on that, Gaga fans.

WEATHER

We at The Unwound Times apologize for the recent lack of forecasts.* We seem to be getting some conflicting reports from our two-man weather team, who as it turns out are lying through their Brit teeth. Mr. Nawtrue seems to be lying on Mon., Tues. and Wed. Mr. McFibbon lies on Thurs., Fri. and Sat. On Sun. both tell the truth.

The two gave the following statements: One quipped, "I'll lie tomorrow." The other stated, "I lied yesterday and will lie tomorrow." We're not even sure who said what or what day they were interviewed on.[4]

*For now we suggest holding a hand out the window.

DINING

CHEF IN A JAM WHILST MAKING JAM

Ask any fine gentleman or sophisticated lady: the dandiest place to eat these days is the Foxx Denn. The star dish of the establishment is the world-famous apricot jam. Chef Foxxman is the mastermind behind the smooth yet complex jam. After begged for a bit, he agreed to take us back into the kitchen for an exciting and exclusive jam session.

"The trick to my jam is to add precisely two ounces of lemon juice for each pitted apricot," stated the chef. The chef's assistant had already stirred up all the apricots in the pot, and the chef did not know how many were in there. Still, he had no problem deciding how many ounces of lemon juice to stir in. We're not quite sure how Foxxman figured it out?![5]

SPECIAL DELIVERY: FISH, CHIPS & MYSTERY

A smashing new restaurant Pfish and Chipps opened today. Run by the siblings Bradford Pfish and Shana Chipps, Pfish & Chipps is rumored to have the most fantastic English grub in town. Though the food is brilliant the grand opening started out with quite the conundrum. There were three crates delivered to the restaurant: one labeled Fish, the second labeled Chips and the third labeled Fish & Chips. The driver, who dropped off the crates, told the owners that all the crates were labeled incorrectly, and they could only ask him to take out one piece of food from one of the crates. Curious. The question still remains: which crate should the brothers choose to determine the correct labels?[6]

BUSINESS

FARMER´S MARKET MATHEMAGIC

The Malachy Farmer's Market has been booming in sales lately with its odd and yet spectacular deals. "It's simple, really," stated owner Malachy Bichonmore. "I create deals that are impossible to beat."

Indeed he does. The latest is a sale of 100 animals for exactly $100. Patrons are given the option of buying goats for $15 each, geese for $1 each and hens for $0.25 each but must buy one of each animal. The trick is to figure out how to spend exactly $100.[7]

RAILROAD LINE BEING RAILROADED

The Titus London Railway is considering closing down its Featherhall-Ballyham line due to ever-sparser use. Inspectors have recently struck upon an odd phenomenon on the southbound line – beginning in Featherhall one-sixth of the passengers exit, one-fifth at Long Buckhorn, one-fourth at Mafferton, one-third at Little Waverdale, half at Grimsby-upon-Humber and ending at Ballyham, where just one exits. Just how many passengers are using this once- venerable rail-line remains to be seen, though decidedly not many.[8]

CRIMES

CRAFTY CRIMINAL ELUDES EXTINCTION

Vince Gerag will breathe another day. Having been sentenced to a 10-man firing squad, Gerag was tied to a post in the center of Royal Sircull Square.

The judge did allow Gerag to choose the arrangement of the squad, provided they be no more than 6 meters away. Having been arranged according to his instruction, the pluckless firing squad refused to fire. The judge, suspecting collusion, is demanding expeditious investigation into the curious case.[9]

OBITUARIES

Reginald Bitdustson passed away yesterday of acute gout. A famed mathematician, he leaves behind a notable legacy at Fractionburg Institute. However, the date of his birth remains a mystery – although the scholar did leave this note behind:

"After spending a blissful 1/6th of my life as a child, I spent 1/12th of my life as an amorous young man. Then, 1/7th of my life later, I got married. After five years of wedded bliss, I was blessed with a child, but sadly, he only lived half the time I was alive before passing. Today, two years after his death, I too shall step from this mortal coil." [10]

"Bubbles" Bubbton was an exceptional purveyor of luxury British grog for over 50 years. In his will, he stated that 21 barrels of his grog will go to his three sons. Seven of those barrels are filled, seven are half full and seven are completely empty.

The champagne and the barrels must be split so that each son has the same number of full, half-full and empty barrels. The regrettable truth is that Lucius left no measuring devices to his sons, and they must solely use the barrels to divide their inheritance. It is unclear how they will rectify this puzzling situation. [11]

MISSED CONNECTIONS

LOOKING FOR YOU:

I look at the photograph all day. If someone asks about it, I say, "Brothers and sisters, I have none. But that man's father is my father's son." Who is it in this photograph that I so long to lay eyes on once again? [12]

AT YOUR FEET:

I see you outside every day. I usually disappear around noon, but then I return. I promise to always be with you on sunny days. Do you even know me? [13]

ASK LAYTON

'A REAL PILL'

Good sir,

O, what a sizable dunderhead I am! Recently, my doctor prescribed me 10 identical-in-appearance pills. The snag is, I must consume these pills in a precise order – thus, I've decided to number them. The question is, how many of these blasted pills will I need to number in order to keep track of the order? Your response is most urgent for soon I may expire!

Godspeed,
W.B. Chodberry

My friend W.B.,
I certainly hope that there hasn't been too much of a delay between writing your letter and this response. A more expedient method of communication may have been a better idea. Anyways, a hint! The answer you seek is more than seven but less than nine. If you're still with us, get well soon, Mister Chodberry!

Yours truly,
Prof. Layton

'SPOILER ALERT'

Professor!

If you would be so kind, might you reveal the answers to the conundrums?

Many thanks!

Friends,
I would be happy to oblige. Here are the answers you seek: 1) $1.19 3 quarters, 4 dimes, 4 pennies. 2) Seven people are coming over. Two little girls, a boy, their parents, & their father's parents. 3) "P" for purple. 4) Wednesday. Nawtrue said the 2nd statement and McFibbon the 1st. 5) He counted the pits. 6) Choose from the one marked "fish and chips." 7) 3 goats, 41 geese and 56 hens. 8) Six people 9) He arranged them in a circle. 10) 82. 11)Two half-full barrels are dumped into one of the empty barrels. Two more half-full barrels are dumped into another one of the empty. Each son gets 3 full barrels, one half-full barrel and 3 empty barrels. 12) His son. 13) Your shadow.
